01 ORTHOPEDIC SIGNAL 85

For CP, whole-body vibration plus stretching may improve knee ROM more than ultrasound.

Why this matters: This randomized trial compared therapeutic ultrasound and whole-body vibration as adjuncts to passive stretching in children with hemiplegic cerebral palsy.

BMC Musculoskeletal Disorders

ALSO TODAY

01 ORTHO AJPM&R

02 NEURO medRxiv

04 PEDIATRIC medRxiv

03 SPORTS Sports Medicine - Open

AI models show promise in rehab treatment planning, but require expert supervision.

Why this matters: This systematic review explored the capabilities of large language models in supporting rehabilitation treatment planning.

SIGNAL 75

AJPM&R

01

Home-based brain-computer interface therapy may offer lasting motor gains for stroke survivors.

Why this matters: This retrospective observational study assessed motor status in stroke survivors using at-home BCI therapy.

SIGNAL 75
medRxiv

For obese children with flat feet, plyometrics may improve balance more than corrective exercises.

Why this matters: This comparative study examined the effects of plyometric versus flatfoot corrective exercises on balance and foot posture.

SIGNAL 75

medRxiv

External training load metrics describe movement, not always biological demand; use caution.

Why this matters: This systematic review evaluated the construct validity of external training load metrics in sport.

SIGNAL 70
Sports Medicine - Open